Chiang Rai

Legend has it that Chiang Rai was founded by Phaya Mengrai. He later relocated to rule Chiang Mai, and subsequently, was succeeded by his son Phaya Chai Songkhram, the next ruler of Chiang Rai - a Chiang Mai vassal. Three hundred years ago Chiang Rai was a ghost town since the war refugees either fleed to other towns or were forcibly displaced to the south. In 1910, under the reign of the King Rama V the Great, Chiang Rai's status was elevated from a vassal town to Mueang Chiang Rai - to be part of an administrative circle used at that time called Monthon. Chiang Saen, Fang, and Phayao were administratively under it. Eventually, Mueang Chiang Rai became a province.

The northern most province of Thailand, Chiang Rai is situated on the Kok River basin 416 metres above sea level. With an area of some 11,678 square kilometres. It is about 829 kilometres from Bangkok. Mostly mountainous, it reaches the Mae Khong River to the north and borders on both Myanmar and Laos.The province is rich in tourism resources in term of natural attractions and antiquities, evidence of its past civilisation. It is also home to several hilltribes who follow fascinating ways of life. Chiang Rai is also a tourism gateway into Myanmar and Laos.

Administration

Chiang Rai is administratively divided into 18 districts; namely, Amphoe Mueang Chiang Rai, Amphoe Wiang Chai, Amphoe Mae Lao, Amphoe Mae Chan, Amphoe Wiang Chiang Rung, Amphoe Phan, Amphoe Phaya Mengrai, Amphoe Pa Daet, Amphoe Mae Suai, Amphoe Doi Luang, Amphoe Khun Tan, Amphoe Chiang Saen, Amphoe Mae Sai, Amphoe Thoeng, Amphoe Mae Fa Luang, Amphoe Wiang Pa Pao, Amphoe Wiang Kaen and Amphoe Chiang Khong.

Wat Phra Kaeo (วัดพระแก้ว)

In 1354, during the reign of King Sam Fang Kaen, who ruled Chiang Mai, lightning struck the chedi of Wat Phra Kaeo, situated on Trai Rat Road, Tambon Wiang, and cracked it open. A Buddha image gilded with gold leaf on black lacquer was found inside the broken chedi. When that black lacquer came off, a beautiful jade figure was then seen concealed within it. This Emerald Buddha is now housed at the Temple of the Emerald Buddha in Bangkok. On 21 October, 1990, enshrined in the Ho Phra Yok or Hall of the Jade Buddha, a replica crafted from jade–Phra Yok Chiang Rai or Phra Phuttha Rattanakon Nawuttiwatsanuson Mongkhon– was commissioned to honour the late Princess Mother's 90th birthday anniversary. The adjacent two-storey modern Lanna style building is a museum or Huang Luang Saeng Kaeo - a reinforced concrete building lined with teak wood both outside and inside. It houses various revered Buddha images including Phra Chao Than Chai, Phra Prot Lok, Phra Phuttha Si Chiang Rai, as well as, a display of modern Buddhist art and culture, Tel: 0 5371 1385, Fax. 0 5371 5875 www.watphrakaew-chiangrai.com open from 7.00 a.m. - 6.00 p.m.

Amphoe Mae Lao

Phrathat Chom Mok Kaeo (พระธาตุจอมหมอกแก้ว)

is a chedi (pagoda) located in Ban Dong Mafueang, Tambon Chom Mok Kaeo. No evidence can be found to tell when the chedi was built. Initially, a villager found a termite mole that looked like a chedi on a small hill, and broken pottery scattered over the ground. Everyone who wishes to enter this forested area must show their respect and ask for permission first. The villagers here have believed that the termite mole was where bones of a member of a royal family in the past had been kept. It is surmised that the chedi was later built to cover the mole. For more details, contact Tel: 0 5318 4166-7.

To get there: From the Den Ha Intersection,

For further details, contact Tel: 0 5376 7040.

Wat Phrathat Chom Chan (วัดพระธาตุจอมจันทร์)

is located in Tambon San Sai. The temple was constructed by Khruba Thip in 1915. One night in a dream, he saw a beam of light rising toward the sky and green lights glittering over a hill for a while. Next morning, he went to explore the hill and found that it was a good place with a surrounding ditch and no parts of it connecting to any other hills around the area. Thus, he invited the villagers to jointly build a chedi (pagoda). In 1925, monk's cells, a Wihan (image hall), and a Sala (pavilion) were constructed, and the temple was named Wat Phrathat Chom Chan. The temple had dwelling monks until 1937 when a forest fire burned down the pavilion and monk's cells, leaving only the image hall and the chedi. Therefore, the faithful villagers built a new temple on the lower ground, 300 m away from the old site. Since then the temple was deserted until 1999, when it has been renovated. It originates from a stream of Amphoe Wiang Chiang Rung on the west, which passes Ban Yao Tat Khwan, ends at the cliff of the waterfall, and then cascades down to Huai Tat Khwan Reservoir. Tat Khwan derives its name from a phenomenon, which is a whitish fog covering this area like white smoke in the cool season, Tel: 0 5371 4914.

Amphoe Mae Suai

Wat Phrachao Thongthip (วัดพระเจ้าทองทิพย์)

is located on the Chiang Rai - Chiang Mai Road. From the town of Chiang Rai, turn right at Km. 121 in Ban Huai Som, and drive on past Tambon Si Thoi for around 6 km. According to history, in 1533 the King of Chiang Mai allowed his daughter to marry King Phothisan of Sisattanakhanahut (Lao PDR), but she had no son. So, she went to ask for a son from Phrachao Thongthip, a Buddha image. Later, she gave the king a son who was named Prince Chaiyachetthathirat. When the prince was 12 years old, the King of Chiang Mai, his grandfather, died without an heir to the throne. The noblemen asked for the prince to reign Chiang Mai. King Phothisan agreed and let the prince bring along with him the Buddha image. The prince cruised along the Mekong, Kok, and Lao Rivers. When the boat arrived at the present location of the temple, it got stranded and was unable to continue the trip. Therefore, the image was moved ashore and left there. King Chaiyachettha ruled Chiang Mai for two years when his father died. Hence, he went back to Luang Prabang and brought with him important Buddha images of Chiang Mai; such as, Phra Kaeo Morakot, Phra Phutthasihing, Phra Setangkhamani or Phra Kaeo Khao, and many others. However, all the images were later returned to Thailand. Phrachao Thongthip was left in the forest for centuries. This 120 cm. high image in the posture of subduing Mara has a lap width of 80 cm. and is famous for its sacredness that someone who wishes to have a child can pray here.

Wat Phrachao Thongthip

Ban Thoet Thai (บ้านเทอดไทย) was initially called "Ban Hin Taek". It is located 66 km. from the town of Chiang Rai. In 1968, Khun Sa as the leader of the Army of the Tai Nation used the area as his stronghold. The word "Khun" was commonly used by the people of Shan State to refer to a person of their respect, but the world knew him by the name of "King of Heroin". During 1976 to 1982, Khun Sa used Ban Hin Taek as his permanent stronghold and did illegal business. Finally, the Thai government forced them out of the Thai territory. At present, the remains of the past can be seen; such as, the house that was used by Khun Sa as the commandcentre. In addition, Ban Thoet Thai is home to communities of many ethnic groups of hilltribe people who can be seen in the morning market.

Suan Mae Fa Luang

Phra Tamnak Doi Tung (พระตำหนักดอยตุง) was once a palace of HRH Princess Srinagarindra, the Princess Mother. It features a combination of the Lanna form of art and the Swiss-style chalet. The building is decorated with wood-carvings by Northern craftsmen in various designs on its Kalae (northern-style gable), Choengchai (eave board), and window frames. Around the palace lie gardens of various flowers with many colours, which provide beauty and freshness, especially in the cold season when mist can be seen slightly covering the surrounding hilltops. Officials lead a tour of 20 minutes each round. It is open daily from 7.00 a.m.-5.30 p.m. Admission is 90 Baht. Suan Mae Fa Luang is situated in front of the palace on an area of around 10 rai. It is a garden of temperate flowers; such as, salvia, petunia, begonia, roses, Dok Lamphong (thorn apple), as well as more than 70 species of auspicious plants, perennial trees, and creepers. It is open daily from 8.00 a.m. - 5.00 p.m. Admission is 50 Baht. Furthermore, a shop offers souvenirs, silk clothes, as well as products of the Royal Project including flowers, fruits, vegetables, and saplings of various plants.

Phrathat Doi Tung (พระธาตุดอยตุง) is located at Km. 17.5 on Highway 1149. The Lord Buddha's left collarbone relics brought from Madhya Pradesh, India, have been enshrined here. It was the first time that the Lankavamsa or Theravada Buddhism was founded in Lanna Thai. In the construction of the relic stupa, a one-thousand-wa long

Phrathat Doi Tung

Takhap flag (or Tung in local dialect) was planted on the hilltop, and the stupa base was designated from the area as far as the flag flied. Thus, the hilltop where the first stupa of Lanna Thai was established was named Doi Tung. Phrathat Doi Tung is an important sacred place. During the homage paying festival, there are Buddhist worshippers both Thais and people from neighbouring countries; such as, the people of Chiang Tung in Shan State, Myanmar, the people of Luang Prabang and Vientiane, Lao PDR, etc. For further details, contact Tel: 0 5376 7061.
